4. Description of your research activities (max 10 lines)

   Latin America is the world’s second largest site of oil reserves, and has the world’s largest exponential growth of proven oil reserves. Since several Latin American countries have updated their legal regulation, the region has become a valuable laboratory of global trends about Oil and Gas regulation and contracts, as well as the main example of Latin American Legal System current trends. In this context, the European experience could be useful to Latin American developments from at least three viewpoints: i) Comparative analysis of Latin American contract models with the prevalent contractual model in Europe (license/concession); ii) Study of multiparty contract problematics; and, iii) Study of contractual clauses to prevent or reduce environmental damages from oil and gas activities. Instead, Latin American Oil and Gas experience is strategic for Europe due to the number of European companies that operate in this sector in that region, and/or are participating in the largest wave of bidding process to assign exploration and production rights of Latin American history.
